Pat was born on April 17, 1944 to Norbert N. Knabe and Juanita Muller in Muenster, Texas. He married Shirley Dittfurth on September 4, 1971. He lived a full life and was a ball of energy. During high school and beyond, Pat rose early to help around the local farms by milking cows. Pat was adventurous and loved everyone, he met no stranger. For example, while in Germany during pre-ceremony events, he had sat down beside a lady he had never met before and they talked for hours just like they were old friends; she still sends messages today about how much she enjoyed his visit. He definitely had a gift of gab which earned him the nickname of 'Motor Mouth' in school which was later passed down to the next generation. He also enjoyed having fun and could be quite the prankster. As a kid, he was a busy boy and ready to do anything fun. Including, spraying the babysitter with the water hose. That joy for fun carried on into his adult life as many of us fell victim to his pranks. One of his most infamous pranks, and one yet to be topped to this day, involved: an insurance convention, some friends, a beach, and a sand crab named Fred. Fred had been captured the day before and was going to be taken home as a pet. Once the festivities of the day had concluded and everyone returned to the room, someone had noticed that Fred had met his untimely demise. Being he good agent that he was, pat place a call to his supervisor, never minding that it was 2:30 in the morning, to report the passing of Fred. After several minutes of inconsolable discussion of who the heck Fred was and where he lived, it was revealed that Fred was a sand crab. Needless to say, his supervisor was less than appreciative of the news. After graduating high school, Pat signed up for the Navy to set sail and see the world. But, as luck would have it, after Basic Training, the Navy flew him to Midway Island. He made many trips back and forth from that lonely island, but never once set foot on a ship to sail the seas allowing him to fulfill his dreams of seeing the world. During his service time with the United States

Navy, Pat trained to be a fireman and shared many stories of his adventures on Midway Island.

After serving his time in the United States Navy, Pat purchased his first car ever; a Mustang that he loved to drive and drive fast. The mustang was eventually replaced by his most beloved white Pontiac. During this time, he held multiple jobs working as an insurance representative for Catholic Life Insurance where he ranked as a 12 apostle for 22 of his 43 years as an agent. He also worked in the auto industry with his brother Herbie and later with his son Rodney. Pat loved his family and will be dearly missed by all who knew him, both near and far. Mr. Knabe passed away on March 3, 2019.
